		the 14th of February 1942 in the Banka Strait and sank within half an hour. While all the nurses survived the bombing, many drowned or were killed by the returning Japanese planes which raked those survivors struggling in the water with deadly machine-gun fire. The 53 remaining nurses staggered ashore in various stages of exhaustion, having spent anywhere from eight to 65 hours in the water. One group of survivors was washed ashore on Banka Island. It was a motley group, comprising nurses, soldiers and civilian men and women. Finding themselves in a desperate situation, they surrendered to Japanese soldiers on the 16th of February. The men in the group were immediately led to a beach behind a bluff. The Japanese soldiers returned alone, cleaning their rifles and bayonets in front of the horrified women. The nurses were then ordered to walk into the sea, where they were machine-gunned. Only one nurse survived, Sister Vivian Bullwinkel.

Boyd's Photographic Gallery was also based at 252 George Street in 1881. Boyd was commissioned to photograph Prince Albert and Prince George during their visit to Australia in 1881. After Boyd's death in 1883 there was legal action between Miss Annie Walker, administrator of his estate, and William Cargill. From 1883, after the litigation, Miss Walker owned Boyd's New Palace of Art at 254-356 George Street. This was run by L.E. Henderson 1883-86 and Alfred Williams in 1887. The San Francisco Palace of Art continued at 252 George Street, Sydney, with W. Cargill as the proprietor. It was managed by W.F. Bennett 1884-85 and W.A.
